The Upper Extremity Center of Midwest Orthopaedics at RUSH (MOR) is one of the only centers in the nation dedicated to the evaluation and treatment of the hand, wrist, elbow, and shoulder. The MOR surgeons specialize in the latest non-operative and surgical techniques for trauma, tendon and nerve conditions, and arthritis of the entire upper extremity. The center combines surgery, rehabilitation, physical and occupational therapy, and research to provide the most advanced treatment for its patients.

MOR was among the first centers in the country to perform entirely arthroscopic repairs of wrists, elbows, and shoulders including rotator cuff and instability of the shoulder. The surgeons have helped design and develop some of the latest technologies for minimally invasive surgery and arthroscopy of the upper extremities, including fracture care, repair of soft tissue, and repair of cartilage injuries allowing for easier and earlier functional recovery.
